Students will have the opportunity to complete their initial preparation on theoretical aspects (10 modules) with practical skills and hands-on training. The aim is to insert the student in the staff of the various host departments and units and make it so they can actively contribute to activities therein. The latter may be in relation to clusters, pharmacovigilance, epidemiology, clinical trials, public healthcare, drug development and vaccines.

Students will complete the internship in pharmaceutical and biomedical companies operating in the clinical development of vaccines and drugs, as well as in clinical testing, national and international research agencies, and in other universities.

Internship activities will be defined in the special programme drafted by the Academic Board.

8.6 The following exams are included in the Master's programme: two written exams during the course of the programme.

Should the student fail one of the intermediate written exams, the Academic Board may allow it to be repeated up to two times, as a written or oral exam. Failure to pass one of the exams three times may lead to exclusion from the programme at the sole discretion of the Academic Board

No university credits (CFU) are awarded for these intermediate exams, as the Examining Committee will evaluate them in relation to the final exam.

Final exam

9.1 The final exam, which confers 14 credits, will consist of a THESIS OR FINAL PAPER

9.2 The results of the final exam will be expressed as marks out of one hundred and ten.
